

ReRoad Bengaluru Report

Citizens Unite Against the Silent Killer on City Roads

“Roads should connect lives, not claim them.”

On a quiet evening in Bengaluru, a group of determined citizens gathered at Freedom Park with a single mission, which was to demand safer roads and an end to the menace of potholes. The initiative, titled REROAD Bengaluru, was not just a protest, but a collective outcry for accountability, responsibility, and change.

A Growing Crisis

Potholes in Bengaluru are more than an inconvenience. They are silent killers, responsible for numerous accidents, injuries, and even lives lost over the years. Despite repeated complaints and public appeals, civic responses often remain delayed or superficial. Frustrated by inaction, ordinary citizens decided to step forward and take ownership of an extraordinary problem.

About The Protest

- On the day of the protest, 19 volunteers assembled at 4:00 PM in Freedom Park. Before arriving, the team had spent time collecting data on potholes across key parts of the city.
- Their efforts to reach public officials went unanswered, which was a reflection of the very negligence they were protesting against.
- Instead of loud slogans, the volunteers chose silence. Holding placards and standing together, they staged a silent protest, symbolizing the quiet suffering of countless commuters who face the daily dangers of broken roads.

A Symbolic Oath

- At the heart of the gathering was a powerful moment where all volunteers took an oath to protect lives endangered by potholes. The oath was a reminder that citizens cannot afford to remain indifferent — every life lost to negligence is one too many.
- Following this, participants signed a petition demanding urgent action and submitted it to the BBMP, pressing for accountability and long-term solutions.

Why It Matters

ReRoad Bengaluru is more than a one-day protest. It represents a growing wave of civic consciousness, where people are no longer content with waiting for change instead they are actively creating pressure for it.

The event underscored three critical truths:

- a) Potholes are preventable hazards and fixing them requires will, not miracles.
- b) Silence is complicity, and every citizen has a role in demanding safer infrastructure.
- c) Accountability is non-negotiable and public institutions must answer for public safety.

Final Word

- The volunteers of REROAD Bengaluru have shown that change begins with small, consistent acts of courage. By documenting issues, uniting as a community, and peacefully demanding action, they've set a precedent for citizen-led activism in the city.
- The petition to BBMP is only the first step. The real measure of success will be in sustained follow-up, continuous pressure, and keeping the conversation alive until Bengaluru's roads are truly safe for all.
- Potholes may look small, but their consequences are devastating. ReRoad Bengaluru's protest was not just about filling craters on asphalt, but it was about filling the gaps in accountability.
